Programming Internet Email David Wood,1999-08-01 The Internet s killer app is not the World Wide Web or Push technologies it is humble electronic mail More people use email than any other Internet application As the number of email users swells and as email takes on an ever greater role in personal and business communication Internet mail protocols have become not just an enabling technology for messaging but a programming interface on top of which core applications are built Programming Internet Email unmaskes the Internet Mail System and shows how a loose federation of connected networks have combined to form the world s largest and most heavily trafficked message system Programming Internet Email tames the Internet s most popular messaging service For programmers building applications on top of email capabilities and power users trying to get under the hood of their own email systems Programming Internet Email stands out as an essential guide and reference book In typical O Reilly fashion Programming Internet Email covers the topic with nineteen tightly written chapters and five useful appendixes Following a thorough introduction to the Internet Mail System the book is divided into five parts Part I covers email formats from basic text messages to the guts of MIME Secure email message formats OpenPGP and S MIME mailbox formats and other commonly used formats are detailed in this reference section Part II describes Internet email protocols SMTP and ESMTP POP3 and IMAP4 Each protocol is covered in detail to expose the Internet Mail System s inner workings Part III provides a solid API reference for programmers working in Perl and Java Class references are given for commonly used Perl modules that relate to email and the Java Mail API Part IV provides clear and concise examples of how to incorporate email capabilities into your applications Examples are given in both Perl and Java Part V covers the future of email on the Internet Means and methods for controlling spam email and newly proposed Internet mail protocols are discussed Appendixes to Programming Internet Email provide a host of explanatory information and useful references for the programmer and avid user alike including a comprehensive list of Internet RFCs relating to email MIME types and a list of email related URLs Programming Internet Email will answer all of your questions about mail and extend your abilities into this most popular messaging frontier

SEED Alessandro Roux, 2014 Webmail services are a convenient internet based access point for email management A webmail user must trust the service provider to honor the user's individual privacy while accommodating their email contents Webmail users are increasingly conscious of the risk to their privacy as many webmail services have fallen victim to cyberattacks where unwanted observers have exploited server vulnerabilities to steal user private data The relationship of trust between webmail provider and webmail user has been further called into question with the reveal of NSA snooping of user email often with the tacit approval of the webmail provider We augment a modern webmail service with end to end encryption of user email data Our system SEED is designed to respect the original functionality of the webmail service Most notably we enable search of encrypted message bodies using the webmail service's built in search engine With an ancillary web browser extension called SEED add on the user is able to manage email in the webmail client while decrypting sensitive email information in a separate local process The browser extension manages the user's encryption keys and decrypts email ciphertext automatically such that the user remains ignorant of the underlying cryptographic implementation as they browse their email Built upon Gmail SEED stores a user's email data on Google's remote servers and guarantees that Google is unable to interpret it When managing their email the user still enjoys the full capabilities of the Gmail web client including composing reading and robustly searching email by message metadata The user is able to do all of this without revealing their usage habits to Google The user is able to do all of this without revealing their emails to Google Using SEED the user benefits from the conveniences of webmail and preserves the integrity of their private information stored online
