

ANSWERS AND EXPLANATIONS

Each time a person enters the room, the computer generates a number and then asks randomly whether they should be given points. It counts the number of times. The data were not plotted until the end of the study, but that presentation was an effective way to allow the group to see what was happening. This study would frequently present the students a visual representation.

Although the researchers were not well trained, and the design wasn't the perfectly planned, balanced, and controlled version that average students would expect, the researchers did not follow the traditional approach to how to do proper testing. Although the testing was not ideal.

The authors took a more experimental approach. The authors were aware that the students were the students. The data were not being shared, which is not what the researchers are looking for.
