Individual differences in associative learning Robin A. Murphy, Rachel M. Msetfi, 2014-09-24 Theories of associative learning have a long history in advancing the psychological account of behavior via cognitive representation. There are many components and variations of associative theory but at the core is the idea that links or connections between stimuli or responses describe important aspects of our psychological experience. This Frontiers Topic considers how variations in association formation can be used to account for differences between people elaborating the differences between males and females, differences over the life span, understanding of psychopathologies or even across cultural contexts. A recent volume on the application of learning theory to clinical psychology is one example of this emerging application, e.g. Hazelgrove Hogarth 2012. The task for students of learning has been the development often with mathematically defined explanations of the parameters and operators that determine the formation and strengths of associations. The ultimate goal is to explain how the acquired representations influence future behavior. This approach has recently been influential in the field of neuroscience where one such learning operator, the error correction principle, has unified the understanding of the conditions which facilitate neuron activation with the computational goals of the brain with properties of learning algorithms, e.g. Rescorla-Wagner 1972. In this Frontiers Research Topic, we are interested in a similar but currently developing aspect to learning theory which is the application of the associative model to our understanding of individual differences, including psychopathology. In general, learning theories are monolithic: the same theory applies to the rat and the human, and within people, the same algorithm is applied to all individuals. If so, this might be thought to suggest that there is little that learning theory can tell us about how males and females differ, how we change over time, or why someone develops schizophrenia, for instance. However, these theories have wide scope for developing our understanding of when learning occurs and when it is interfered with, along with a variety of methods of predicting these differences. We received contributions from researchers studying individual differences, including sex differences, age-related changes, and those using analog or clinical samples of personality and psychopathological disorders where the outcomes of the research bear directly on theories of associative learning. This Research Topic brings together researchers studying basic learning and conditioning processes but in which the basic emotional, attentional, pathological, or more general physiological differences between groups of people are modeled using associative theory. This work involves varying stimulus properties and temporal relations or modeling the differences between groups.

Learning and Behavior Lewis M. Barker, 1997. Student friendly in approach, this text provides an integrative multidisciplinary look at how and why humans and non-human animals learn and behave as they do. It offers comprehensive, balanced coverage of learning and behaviour theory, methodology, and research with an emphasis on their application to human learning and behaviour from biological, psychological, behavioural, and sociocultural perspectives.

Adaptive Learning and the Human Condition Jeffrey C. Levy, 2015-10-30. Adaptive Learning and the Human Condition presents the basic principles of classical Pavlovian and instrumental Skinnerian conditioning in a more coherent and expansive manner than is the case in other textbooks Learning is defined as an adaptive process through which individuals acquire the ability to predict and where possible control the environment This overarching definition enables integration of traditional Pavlovian and Skinnerian principles and terminology and makes explicit why treatment of the learning process is essentially limited to these two historical research paradigms Pavlov developed a methodology for studying animals under circumstances where they could predict but not control sequences of environmental events Skinner studied animals under circumstances where their behavior had an effect upon environmental events Observational learning and symbolic communication i e spoken or written language are incorporated as indirect learning processes through which individuals can acquire the ability to predict or control This treatment creates a perspective within which it is possible to consider the fundamental nature of the learning process in understanding the human condition and in addressing significant individual and social concerns Examples of applications and issues not included in similar textbooks include The role of classical and instrumental conditioning in language acquisition The administration of rewards and punishers in Baumrind s parental styles as related to Kohlberg s stages of moral development Stone Age hunter gatherer and technologically advanced cultures How did we get from there to here Self control and self actualization While covering traditional technical and theoretical issues the book is written in a clear engaging style The narrative builds across chapters culminating in the treatment of applications and societal concerns of import and interest to students and faculty alike Upon completing this book readers should be able to explain the significance of human condition through adaptive learning present the basic principles of classical and instrumental conditioning and understand the significance of scientific research The Publishers' Trade List Annual ,1985 Psychology: Core Concepts Fifth Edition ,2005-08 The Essentials of Conditioning and Learning Michael Domjan,1996 Michael Domjan one of the top researchers in his field presents a concise current book of the principles of conditioning and learning perfect for professors and students alike who want an accurate and detailed account of learning and conditioning the essentials without excessive research and detail Books in Print Supplement ,2002 Animal Learning & Behavior ,1986 Medical Books and Serials in Print ,1984
