Freud Sebastian Smee:

Freud at Work Sebastian Smee, Lucian Freud, 2006 Lucian Freud is not only the most celebrated artist working in England but one of the most private. He has frequently stated his reluctance to be photographed and he has almost never agreed to be interviewed. Following the publication of the last ten years of his work by Jonathan Cape in the autumn of 2005 the painter has agreed to talk to Sebastian Smee a writer on art whom he greatly respects in a series of conversations rather than formal interviews. He wants to talk about painting itself the demands of his own work and the painters he admires. Two photographers have had access to Freud's studio. The late Bruce Bernard was a friend for many years and the subject of two of Freud's paintings. Bernard was an authority on photography a great picture editor and also a very fine photographer. He made a number of studies of Freud at work. Over the last five years in particular Freud's assistant the painter David Dawson has been photographing the artist constantly. The results reveal various stages of works in progress including paintings of Dawson himself and the intensity of the activity in this very secret domain. The only precedent to such a document might be David Douglas Duncan's photographs of Picasso at work but nothing as extensive has been published on such a major painter before. The Art of Rivalry Sebastian Smee, 2016 Picasso Matisse Manet Degas Pollack de Kooning Lucian Freud Francis Bacon. This is the story of four pairs of artists each linked by friendship and a spirit of competitiveness. Taken together they form an impressive lineage stretching across more than 150 years. But in each case these relationships had a flashpoint a damaging psychological event that seemed to mark both an end and a new beginning a break that led onto new creative innovations. Lucian Freud, 1996-2005 Lucian Freud, Sebastian Smee, 2005 At the time of the publication of Lucian Freud the definitive monograph by Jonathan Cape in 1996 Freud was already regarded as one of the great portrait painters of all time. His naked portraits had no parallel. His work exists outside the currents of contemporary art in a domain of his own. In the years since that publication his output has only increased. His worldwide reputation continues to be celebrated In London he has been shown in a major retrospective at the Tate and more recently a number of his new paintings have been shown at the Wallace Collection This second volume contains the recent paintings both large and small together with a number of extraordinary new works on paper His work shows no sign of diminishing energy We are witnessing the work of one of the great artists of our time now in his eighties as he reaches still further with his scrutiny of human form and flesh
