media carry significant notions of social and cultural norms and values and have a powerful role in constructing and reinforcing gendered images The news in particular has an important role in how notions of power are distributed in the society This report presents study findings on how women and men are represented in the news in the Nordic countries and to what extent women and men occupy the decision making positions in the media The survey is based on the recent findings from three cross national research projects These findings are supported by national studies The results indicate that in all the Nordic countries women are underrepresented in the news media both as news subjects and as sources of information Men also dominate in higher level decision making positions The report includes examples of measures used to improve the gender balance in Nordic news Gender, Politics, News Karen Ross,2017-01-30 Gender Politics News A Game of Three

Sides explores the role of gender in the broader processes of political communication The only contemporary book focusing on the relationships between gender politics and news media which takes a global perspective An analysis of political journalism as a practice and the development of the field in terms of gendered workplace cultures Offers a solid framework for understanding women's political representation including real world case studies of women's campaigns for the top political job across a range of different geographies and contexts Coverage of hot button issues such as political scandal and the role of new and social media in politics and elections makes this a highly relevant and current work with resonances for a wide audience

The Gendered Newsroom Louise North, 2008 The Gendered Newsroom is a vivid exploration of the gendered production of news and in particular the experiences of women in the Australian print news media The book engages with the question of how gender shapes newsroom culture and in so doing is concerned with production practices and cultural processes It considers the dilemmas constraints negotiations and compromises which shape journalists day to day routines It probes specific questions about gender in asking what is journalism and what is a journalist How is newsroom culture embodied How do female journalists experience newsroom culture How has global industry change impacted on the workplace and what does this mean for journalists How does feminism get played out in the newsroom And what is the relationship of newsroom culture to the content of the news The author's astute empirical research provides a distinctive account of how Australian print news media journalists experience newsroom culture The 17 in depth interviews with journalists ranging in age and industry experience reveal a complex culture coming to terms with dramatic industry changes

News, Gender and Power Stuart Allan, Gill Branston, Cynthia Carter, 2002-01-31 How do gender relations affect the practice of journalism Despite the star status accorded to some women reporters and the dramatic increase in the number of women working in journalism why do men continue to occupy most senior management positions And why do female readers viewers and listeners remain as elusive as ever News Gender and Power addresses the pressing questions of how gender shapes the forms practice institutions and audiences of journalism The contributors who include John Hartley Pat Holland Jenny Kitzinger and Myra Macdonald draw on feminist theory and gender sensitive critiques to explore media issues such as ownership and control employment and occupation status the representation of women in the media the sexualization of news and audience research Within this framework the contributors explore media coverage of the trial of O J Simpson British beef and the BSE scandal the horrific crimes of Fred and Rosemary West child sexual abuse and false memory syndrome the portrayal of women in TV documentaries such as Modern Times and Cutting Edge

Fair and Gender Balanced? Gail Baitinger, 2016 Why are women still a minority of sources in American political news Do gender stereotypes influence which issues men and women discuss as media sources Although the political environment has become increasingly favorable to women in recent years female candidates for office are just as likely as their male counterparts to be elected and gender stereotyping of candidates by voters is waning these questions remain relevant to our understanding of representation in American politics As women increase their presence in political occupations it is important that they are given the same opportunities as men to influence the policy agenda and garner the authority and publicity that comes with media appearances But much of the current research indicates that women and men do not receive equal treatment in the news and the prevailing view attributes gender differences to stereotyping and bias against women. The three essays in this dissertation use original data sets to determine whether certain characteristics explain why women remain a small percentage of news sources. Across the board I find little support for bias and stereotyping as explanations for women's underrepresentation in the media. Women's minority presence in the news is well established but its origins are unknown. In the first essay of this dissertation I investigate two competing hypotheses for the difference in the numeric representation of men and women in the media. The conventional wisdom suggests that bias against women leads to men being selected as news sources more frequently than women. But journalists tend to adhere to long held norms when choosing sources for a news story: they rely on official sources with expertise in specific issue areas and who provide credibility and balance to the news. Due to women's minority presence in elective office and especially in leadership positions, men greatly outnumber women in the pool of potential official sources. Thus in this essay I determine whether demand sexism or supply journalistic norms explain why so few women appear as news sources. I employ an original data set of more than 4,200 appearances by elected officials and non-elected political actors on the Sunday morning talk shows. The findings confirm that women of seven different political professions are less likely than men to appear as sources. But the regression results also show that the gender gap does not result from overt bias. Rather, the characteristics that contribute to repeated appearances on Sunday morning are consistent with journalistic norms to find the most newsworthy sources. Because there are few women in the positions and professions from which most sources are selected, though these norms also perpetuate a gendered news environment. The numeric underrepresentation of women in television news is established and explained in the first essay, so the second chapter turns to the content of men and women's appearances as sources in the news. A wide body of research finds that women and men receive political media coverage that highlights their expertise in different and often stereotypical issue areas. Most of this literature, however, examines print media coverage during campaigns only. And considering the presence of women in today's political arena is not the novelty it was in previous decades when few women had political careers, it is time to reexamine the prevailing view. The interview format of the Sunday morning news programs provides an excellent opportunity to study the issues discussed by men and women in the media as well as the manner in which they talk about them. With an original data set of the comments made by guests on the Sunday shows throughout more than 2,500 appearances, I find that men and women tend to discuss the same issues as news sources. Female guests make more liberal statements than men, though this slant is influenced more by the guest's party affiliation than sex. These results suggest that men and women are equally situated to set the agenda on a variety of political topics, but men dominate the discussions because they appear on the programs more often. In the final essay I turn to the print media to determine whether the findings from the first two essays apply to another medium. Individual journalists have more discretion over source selection in the print media than in television news. Previous research shows that similar to television news, women are less likely than men to be quoted as sources in the print media In addition male and female sources tend to be quoted in articles about gender stereotypical issues men are quoted in articles about the economy and crime while quotes from women appear frequently in lifestyle stories Since national newspapers are influential in setting the political agenda and influencing other news outlets establishing an explanation for these gender differences is important for descriptive and substantive representation I use an original data set of quotes from members of Congress in a national newspaper USA Today to explain why so few women appear in the print media The findings from this analysis show that journalistic norms contribute to the minority presence of female sources in the prestige press Journalists rely on sources with high profile careers and expertise in issue areas that lend newsworthiness to their stories There are no gender differences in the topics men and women discuss in the news though Since female sources are greatly outnumbered by men in the media however men have more opportunities to set the agenda on all important issue areas These three essays show that women s under representation in the political news is not due to overt sexism or stereotyping Instead journalistic norms routinely lead reporters to select sources from positions in which women are under represented Together these findings suggest that women s presence in the media will improve only as women increase their presence in high level political roles

Gendered Media Karen Ross,2013-02-20 Gendered Media addresses the broad topic of gender and media where gender is not simply a shorthand for woman but also embraces masculinity ies queer lesbian and gay identities Karen Ross provides the necessary historical context against which to read recent sex and gender based media phenomena such as Big Brother Terminator girls use of mobile phones women news editors the Wonderbra generation the Hillary Clinton and Sarah Palin phenomena and so on The book is an overview of the various aspects of gender and media in one volume The book provides introductory overviews to the various themes around women men sexuality and the ways in which these attributes are cross cut by other demographics such as age ethnicity and disability In this way the book genuinely tries to provide a broad introduction to the ways in which gender in all its facets engages with media in one accessible volume
