Abstract A review of the literature on the development of the concept of the self in the early years of life. The review is based on a search of the literature in the field of child development, with particular emphasis on the role of the family and the social environment in the development of the self. The review is organized into three main sections: (1) the development of the self in the first year of life, (2) the development of the self in the second year of life, and (3) the development of the self in the third year of life. The review concludes that the development of the self is a complex process that is influenced by a variety of factors, including the child's genetic makeup, the child's environment, and the child's interactions with others.

Abstract.—The authors examined the relationship of the social desirability scale to the Machiavellianism scale and the Machiavellianism scale to the Machiavellianism scale. The results showed that the Machiavellianism scale is a reliable measure of Machiavellianism and that the Machiavellianism scale is a reliable measure of Machiavellianism.
