Managing Elite Sport Systems Svein S. Andersen, Barrie Houlihan, Lars Tore Ronglan, 2015-06-26 Over the last twenty years or so there has been a sharp increase in interest from national sports federations and governments in the development of effective elite sport systems particularly focused on achieving success in the summer and winter Olympic Games Many countries now have publicly funded elite sports strategies which provide specialist facilities and support staff and often provide direct financial support for athletes. These developments have stimulated academic interest in describing the elite sport systems, analysing the processes by which policy is established and evaluating the impact of these policies on elite athlete success. Far less attention has been placed on the operation of the elite sports systems and on how the system interfaces with the athlete. The aim of this book is to refocus attention on the management and operation of systems designed to deliver elite success. The book draws on the theoretical literature in implementation, organisation, theory, leadership and complexity. This provides an initial context for analysis and a stimulus for theory development around key questions such as: How do coaches manage their relationship with athletes? How does talent identification operate in practice? Do coaches fulfil the role of gatekeeper between the athlete and other elements of the sports system, e.g. sports science support? How do managers, support staff and athletes interpret the expectations placed on them? The first part of the book focuses on aspects of the effectiveness of elite sports systems and the second explores aspects of systems operation focused on the interface between the athlete and the sport development system. Cross-cutting themes within the book include the management of talent identification and coach development. This is illuminating reading for any student, researcher or practitioner working in sport development, sport management or sports coaching.

No other book has attempted to model sports development in the United States in such depth before. service evaluation      Elite Sport Development in South Korea Jae Woo Park, 2011 This thesis explores the process of elite sport policy development in South Korea The thesis analyses the process of policy change in the sports of athletics archery and baseball at the elite level The three objectives of the study are i to trace the emergence development and current status of elite sport policy in South Korea ii to identify how elite sport policy has changed in response to both exogenous factors and endogenous factors and iii to evaluate the utility of the macro level and meso level theories of the process of policy change in relation to Korean elite sport development A case study approach is adopted focusing on each of the three sports in turn wherein a qualitative methodology semi structured interviews and document analysis is utilised in order to elicit data regarding elite sport policy change and development The analysis of the three case studies is organised by following the two principal themes identified by Green ii improvements in sport science coaching and facilities and iii the provision of more systematic competition opportunities for elite level athletes It could be argued that Green Houlihan s 2005 analytical framework was very useful in investigating elite sport development in the cases of athletics archery and baseball but it did not identify all distinctive aspect of Korean elite sport system A further prominent area of elite sport development has emerged and identified in the cases of the three sports that is a cash award system This study reveals the significance of business leaders on the development of the three sports in general and the sports successes in international sporting competitions in particular The study also identifies that all three sports have been shaped by the actions of a sport policy community involving a small number of groups or actors which share common perceptions and the ultimate goal of each sport s success in international sporting events The study concludes that the over lapping assumptions between elitism and neo pluralism are the most likely explanation of the Korean elite sport policy process at the macro level analysis It is concluded that although three frameworks ACF MSF and policy networks provide partial insights into Korean elite sport policy process in the three sports none of the three frameworks adopted provides a comprehensive explanation of policy change in the three sports In particular the advocacy coalition framework has proved useful in drawing attention to the notion of exogenous factors e g a sport s failure at an international sporting completion and the change of the presidency of NGBs and policy learning as a key source of policy change The concept of policy community which is a type of policy network has provided partial insights in terms of illuminating the characteristics of the Korean elite sport policy process at the macro level analysis although it has not been a particularly useful lens for explaining the mechanism of policy change in the three sports investigated      Routledge Handbook of Sports Development Barrie Houlihan, Mick Green, 2010-12-16 Sports development has become a prominent concern within both the academic study of sport and within the organisation and administration of sport Now available in paperback the Routledge Handbook of Sports Development is the first book to comprehensively map the wide ranging territory of sports development as an activity and as a policy field and to offer a definitive survey of current academic knowledge and professional practice Spanning the whole spectrum of activity in sports
