possible outcomes that are consistent with this rapidly moving mosaic of events My purpose is to evaluate the potential for a peaceful resolution of the nuclear dilemma in Korea First I outline the basis of Western concern over North Korea s nuclear activities and describe the stances taken by the various parties to the Korean conflict on the issue Next I analyse the threats emanating from some quarters in Seoul and Washington of attacking North Korea s nuclear sites and possible North Korean reprisals Third I examine the idea of challenge inspections of North Korea s nuclear program an alternative that is also discounted as unrealistic Finally I sketch a range of possible outcomes of the current impasse starting with the most optimistic and ending with the most pessimistic arguably the least likely None of the key variables underlying these scenarios the dominant world views in Seoul and Washington the emphasis on military versus economic power the ability of the two North Korean elites to achieve mutual understanding are predetermined These alternative nuclear futures therefore represent stark choices for and political challenges to all parties to the Korean conflict The U.S. Government and the Vietnam War William Conrad Gibbons,1984
