

GENERAL GUIDE AND STEP-BY-STEP APPROACH

General Guide of Breaking Bad News Stations

The process of discussing bad news is an attempt to achieve four essential goals:

- ✓ Information gathering from patient
- ✓ Provide intelligible information according to patients' needs
- ✓ Providing psychological support to reduce emotional impact
- ✓ Develop a strategy in the form of treatment

The widely used technique to approach breaking bad news stations is the universal "SPIKES" Protocol. This protocol involves setting up a suitable environment and atmosphere for patient and family for the discussion to take place. Before discussing the important information to the patient, candidates are expected to assess patient's perception to gauge their knowledge prior to the discussion. This gives candidates a general idea on what piece of information should the candidates emphasize on during the discussion. Before discussing the news to patient, it is important to obtain invitation and approval from the patients. The next part involves breaking the news and giving them adequate information regarding their condition. Candidates would be expected to show empathy and care to make patients feel more comfortable. Before ending the discussion, the general treatment plan and management should be outlined to give patient insight on what they should expect next.

1	SETTING up the Interview
2	Assessing patients' PERCEPTION
3	Obtaining INVITATION
4	Giving knowledge about regarding the disease to patient
5	Showing EMPATHY
6	STRATEGY and SUMMARY

1. Speak in a slow, timely manner. Allow patient time to take in and digest the information given.
2. Providing warning efforts is of utmost importance to allow patient to be mentally prepared for the bad news. For example,

"I am sorry, the news is not what we hoped for"

"I am so sorry Mr. Jack, but I have a bad news"

3. Appropriate and deliberate pause in complete statements.
4. Allow for silence and tears.
5. Offer tissues if patients appears crying.
6. Appropriate comforting touch-over shoulder and arms shows empathy and care for the patient. However, be sensitive to cultural difference as some patients may prefer against personal contact.
7. Appropriate facial expression is vital to excel in breaking bad news stations. Candidates often find practising in front of a mirror or video-taping the session useful for better feedback. Practice with partners and share your impressions on each performance. Avoid inappropriate humour or flippant comments eg "Well, everyone will die someday".
8. Speak frankly but compassionately.
9. Offer interdisciplinary service to enhance patient's care, eg social workers, clinical psychologist, hospice etc.
10. Do not argue or criticise colleagues.
11. Offer realistic hope according to the patient's goal.
12. Allow patients to describe his or her understanding of news in own words if time factor is permissible.
13. For Hays-UK related candidates, try to familiarise with the common vocabulary used for various stations.
14. Most importantly, PRACTICE MAKES PERFECT!
