

Stargazers

People have studied celestial objects for thousands of years. This study is called astronomy. Around 400 years ago, a special tool was invented that made the task easier – this tool is called a telescope.

Copernicus placed the Sun at the center of the universe. He 'stopped' the Sun and moved the Earth!

Before the telescope

People were shocked when Polish astronomer Nicolaus Copernicus suggested in 1543 that the Earth was just another planet and the planets orbited (went around) the Sun. Then, it was a common belief that the Earth was at the centre of the Universe.

Saturn as described by Galileo – he thought Saturn's rings were two moons or 'ears'.

Saturn as we know it today.

What do you think?

Galileo's discoveries were not welcomed by the Church in 17th-century Italy and he spent the last few years of his life under house arrest.

Hubble has taken incredibly detailed images, such as this one of the birth of a star.

The Hubble Telescope was launched in the 1990s.

Antenna used for sending and receiving signals from the Earth.

Solar panels convert sunlight into electricity.

Hubble is about the size of a school bus.

Hubble is serviced by the Flight Operations Team (FOT) at the Goddard Space Flight Center in Greenbelt, Maryland, USA. The team use computers to constantly check all its working well.

Guess what I can see!

The Italian astronomer Galileo Galilei built a simple telescope in 1609 and proved Copernicus had been right. He discovered Venus had phases (like our Moon), he saw Jupiter's moons, and he spotted mountains on our Moon.

Sketch of a 17th-century telescope.

An eye in space

Now we have telescopes in space, most famously the Hubble Space Telescope (HST). It orbits the Earth at a speed of around 28,000 kph (17,400 mph) and is controlled from the Earth.

The James Webb Space Telescope (JWST) is currently being planned to replace Hubble in 2018. It will see further and more clearly than Hubble.
