EXPERIMENTAL PROCEDURE FOR GREENHOUSE EFFECT

1. Fill two identical glass containers with water. Place a thermometer in each container. The containers should be placed in a sunny area where they will receive direct sunlight.

2. Cover one of the containers with a clear plastic sheet, securing it around the edges. This represents the atmosphere of a planet.

3. Leave the containers in the sunlight for approximately 30 minutes. During this time, observe the temperature of the water in both containers.

4. After 30 minutes, record the temperature of the water in both containers. The container without the plastic cover should be noticeably cooler than the one with the cover.

5. Remove the plastic cover from the second container and leave it in the sunlight for another 30 minutes. Record the temperature of the water in this container.

6. The temperature of the water in the second container should now be similar to the temperature of the water in the first container, demonstrating that the plastic cover (atmosphere) traps heat.
