Evidence Based Policy A Practical Guide To Doing It Better:

Evidence-Based Policy Nancy Cartwright, Jeremy Hardie, 2012-09-27 Over the last twenty or so years it has become standard to require policymakers to base their recommendations on evidence That is now uncontroversial to the point of triviality of course policy should be based on the facts But are the methods that policy makers rely on to gather and analyse evidence the right ones This book explains that the dominant methods which are in use now broadly speaking methods that imitate standard practices in medicine like randomised control trials do not work They fail because they do not enhance our ability to predict if policies will be effective

Weaponising Evidence Margherita Melillo, 2024-02 Analyses the history of the international law on tobacco control from the negotiation of the WHO FCTC to the WTO Science in Negotiation Jessica Espey, 2022-11-28 This book explores the role of scientific evidence within United Nations UN deliberation by examining the negotiation of the Sustainable Development Goals SDGs endorsed by Member States in 2015 Using the SDGs as a case study this book addresses a key gap in our understanding of the role of evidence in contemporary international policy making It is structured around three overarching questions 1 how does scientific evidence influence multilateral policy development within the UN General Assembly 2 how did evidence shape the goals and targets that constitute the SDGs and 3 how did institutional arrangements and non state actor engagements mediate the evidence to policy process in the development of the SDGs The ultimate intention is to tease out lessons on global policy making and to understand the influence of different evidence inputs and institutional factors in shaping outcomes To understand the value afforded to scientific evidence within multilateral deliberation a conceptual framework is provided drawing upon literature from policy studies and political science including recent theories of evidence informed policy making and new institutionalism It posits that the success or failure of evidence informing global political processes rests upon the representation and access of scientific stakeholders levels of community organisation the framing and presentation of evidence and time including the duration over which evidence and key conceptual ideas are presented Cutting across the discussion is the fundamental question of whose evidence counts and how expertise is defined The framework is tested with specific reference to three themes that were prominent during the SDG negotiation process public health articulated in SDG 3 urban sustainability articulated in SDG 11 and data and information systems which were a cross cutting theme of the dialogue Within each scientific communities had specific demands and through an exploration of key literature including evidence inputs and UN documentation as well as through key informant interviews the translation of these scientific ideas into policy priorities is uncovered The intended audiences of this book include academic practitioners studying evidence to policy processes multilateral negotiation and or UN policy planning The book also intends to provide useful insights for policy makers including UN diplomats officials and staff working to improve the quality of evidence communication and uptake within multilateral institutions Finally it aims to support the whole global academic and scientific community including students of public policy and political science by providing insights on how to input into influence and even shape international evidence informed policy making Solving Public Problems Beth Simone Noveck,2021-06-22 How to take advantage of technology data and the collective wisdom in our communities to design powerful solutions to contemporary problems The challenges societies face today from inequality to climate change to systemic racism cannot be solved with yesterday s toolkit Solving Public Problems shows how readers can take advantage of digital technology data and the collective wisdom of our communities to design and deliver powerful solutions to contemporary problems Offering a radical rethinking of the role of the public servant and the skills of the public workforce this book is about the vast gap between failing public institutions and the huge number of public entrepreneurs doing extraordinary things and how to close that gap Drawing on lessons learned from decades of advising global leaders and from original interviews and surveys of thousands of public problem solvers Beth Simone Noveck provides a practical guide for public servants community leaders students and activists to become more effective equitable and inclusive leaders and repair our troubled twenty first century world The Bloomsbury data and first hand experience Ball presents a detailed account of Australia s attempts to incorporate behavioural insights into its public policy Ball identifies three competing interpretations of behavioural public policy and how these interpretations have influenced the use of this approach in practice The first sees the process as an opportunity to introduce more rigorous evidence The second interpretation focuses on increasing compliance cost savings and cutting red tape The last focuses on the opportunity to better involve citizens in policy design These interpretations demonstrate different solutions to a series of dilemmas that the Australian Public Service and others have confronted in the last 50 years including growing politicisation technocracy and a disconnect from the needs of citizens Ball offers a detailed account of how these priorities have shaped how behavioural insights have been implemented in policy making as well as reflecting on the challenges facing policy work more broadly An essential read for practitioners and scholars of policy making especially in Australia Proceedings and Addresses of the American Philosophical Association American Philosophical Association, 2015-11 List of members in v 1

Evidence-Based Policy Nancy Cartwright, Jeremy Hardie, 2012-09-27 Over the last twenty or so years it has become standard to require policy makers to base their recommendations on evidence That is now uncontroversial to the point of triviality of course policy should be based on the facts But are the methods that policy makers rely on to gather and analyze evidence the right ones In Evidence Based Policy Nancy Cartwright an eminent scholar and Jeremy Hardie who has had a long and successful career in both business and the economy explain that the dominant methods which are in use now broadly speaking methods that imitate standard practices in medicine like randomized control trials do not work They fail Cartwright and Hardie contend because they do not enhance our ability to predict if policies will be effective The prevailing methods fall short not just because social science which operates within the domain of real world politics and deals with people differs so much from the natural science milieu of the lab Rather there are principled reasons why the advice for crafting and implementing policy now on offer will lead to bad results Current guides in use tend to rank scientific methods according to the degree of trustworthiness of the evidence they produce That is valuable in certain respects but such approaches offer little advice about how to think about putting such evidence to use Evidence Based Policy focuses on showing policymakers how to effectively use evidence It also explains what types of information are most necessary for making reliable policy and offers lessons on how to organize that information Revue française des affaires sociales , 2020-10

Evidence-based Practice for Information Professionals Andrew Booth, Anne Brice, 2004 Evidence based practice is a paradigm that originated within healthcare but is rapidly migrating to other fields It involves applying the results from rigorous research studies to professional practice in order to improve the quality of services to clients Familiarity with these methods has caused an increasing number of information professionals to turn a critical eye to their own practice Is it possible to adapt this model to librarianship and information work To what extent are its skills and techniques transferable to the various areas of professional practice Is it desirable for information professionals to integrate research findings into their day to day decision making These and other related issues are discussed in this book the first to examine this key topic in depth It is divided into three parts The Context for Evidence based practice Skills And Resources for Evidence based Information Practice and Using the Evidence Base in Practice This last part explores each of the six domains of evidence based librarianship identified in research to demonstrate the application of evidence based information practice in a practical decision making context These chapters with their associated Special Topics present concise summaries of evidence based information practice within generic areas of work together with practical examples of the application of evidence based principles and methods Supported by a wealth of case studies drawn from a wide range of sectors these contributions from leading edge professionals cover the following key issues why evidence based information practice a brief history of evidence based practice how good is the evidence base why don t librarians use research formulating answerable questions identifying sources of evidence and searching the LIS literature appraising the evidence applying evidence to everyday practice and evaluating your performance disseminating the lessons of evidence based practice examining the evidence base for reference services and enquiry work the contribution of evidence based practice to educational activities towards evidence based management evidence based perspectives on information access and retrieval introducing an evidence based approach to marketing and promotional activities Readership This book is of wide interest to all new and established information professionals both those in fields such as healthcare where the evidence based paradigm is already impacting on their work and those in other fields encountering it for the first time It is a core text in departments of library and information work Scientific Advice, Risk and Evidence Based Policy Making Great Britain.

Parliament. House of Commons. Science and Technology Committee, 2006 This report presents the Committee s findings on the operation of the scientific advisory system as a whole It builds on the case studies covered in three previous reports on MRI safety the illegal drugs classification and ID card technologies The Committee recommends that the role of Government Chief Scientific Adviser GCSA be split from that of Head of the Office of Science and Innovation to enable full attention to be given to the GCSA s cross departmental functions The GCSA would be better placed in a department such as the Cabinet Office which has cross departmental responsibilities The establishment of departmental CSAs is welcomed but more needs to be done to ensure they maximize their contribution to strategic decision making and policy development within departments The report also recommends the establishment of a Government Scientific Service to enhance scientific support in the civil service and calls for greater involvement of learned societies and professional bodies in the advisory system The Committee wants greater public investment in research to underpin evidence based policy making with the establishment of a cross departmental fund to commission independent research The short term nature of the political cycle should be counterbalanced by embedding horizon scanning into the policy making process Transparency in policy making has improved but more could be done Valuable work on risk should be continued and responsible coverage of risk by the media should be encouraged by greater involvement of departmental CSAs and greater clarity and consistency in public communication
