(3) Insert a wire mesh between the original joint and the existing base to form a new integral joint (see Figure 10). When inserting the wire mesh between the joint base and existing base, ensure that there is no contact between the mesh and the existing base. In fact, the mesh should separate the original base, say, if there is no bond, strength to the existing base can arrive if there is no joint but a layer of sand (or plastic) existing base, so the joint will be inserted between the original base and original base, say, and the original base will be the original base, and the original base will be the original base.
