

MX-Stream Control Options Overview

The MX-Stream has a wide variety of control options. This doesn't only make it incredibly versatile but also extremely future proof and able to withstand technical difficulties or the constant changes in the IT landscape (downtime of Apple or Android App stores, no Internet connection, etc...). In fact, the MX-Stream can be entirely controlled without any internet access and without any App downloads! So, if you just want to play some local music from a USB Stick or hard drive or stream via Bluetooth, we will explain everything in this guide!

Before you start, you need to either connect your MX-Stream to your home network via WiFi or cabled ethernet. You do this without the need of any app or any extra downloads! Please refer to the Quick Start manual.

And still very important to stress is that cabled ethernet is still vastly superior to WiFi connections even in the year 2022! Realtime audio applications, such as the MX-Stream with high-resolution audio, benefit from stable cabled ethernet connections like you wouldn't believe. For regular HTTP web applications, like the internet, Web2.0 or 3.0, the quality of your connection rarely matters. Your phone may show you full bars for your WiFi quality, but this does not say anything about packet loss and drop-outs caused by WiFi all the time. Don't worry, all of that is insignificant for websites or social media. You are not relying on data reaching its destination within the correct timeframe and without degradation or loss. Modern web protocols will just request missing or faulty packets again or in some cases it even doesn't matter if all packets are transmitted. Websites, social media or video streaming will work even under all those circumstances! Quality is not their concern! The protocols for streaming realtime audio in an audiophile lossless way are completely different to the modern YouTubes, Facebooks and Instagrams of our time! With this in mind, enjoy music streaming on your MX-Stream on the highest level possible!
