Biomarkers and Immunotherapy of Hepatic-Biliary-Pancreatic Cancers Yunfei Xu,Hongda Liu,Xuexong Gu,Zheng Gong,2024-02-29 Hepatic biliary pancreatic cancers mainly including hepatocellular carcinoma cholangiocarcinoma gallbladder cancer are highly aggressive malignancies with few treatment options and poor prognoses Effects of the traditional systemic treatments such as chemotherapy and radiotherapy are quite limited to hepatic biliary pancreatic cancers For the patients who suffer from hepatic biliary pancreatic cancer and lose the opportunity of radical surgery few targeted drugs are available Even for the drugs in clinical trial potential drug targets and prognostic biomarkers for hepatic biliary pancreatic cancer are less studied compared to other common cancers such as lung cancer Prognostic biomarker study is the initiation to explore new drug targets and revelation of the underlying mechanisms of tumor progression

Advancements in Understanding and Managing Preeclampsia: Exploring Molecular Mechanisms, Biomarkers, and Clinical Implications Rajni Kant,Rajesh Kumar Manne,Subhradip Karmakar,Narasaiah Kovuru,2025-12-02

Preeclampsia is a complex multisystem disorder associated with pregnancy characterized primarily by proteinuria and hypertension and can lead to severe end organ failure. Affecting 2-15-6% of pregnancies globally, it stands as the second leading cause of maternal mortality and a significant contributor to morbidity in both mothers and fetuses. The condition is further complicated by its interaction with other diseases such as diabetes, COVID-19, HIV, and autoimmune disorders. Despite extensive research efforts, the precise etiology of preeclampsia remains unclear, and there is a notable absence of specific biomarkers and targeted treatments. Recent studies have hinted at hormonal influences such as hCG in the development of preeclampsia, yet a comprehensive understanding is still lacking. Addressing these challenges requires an interdisciplinary approach that combines advances in basic science, clinical research, and healthcare delivery. By fostering collaboration between researchers and healthcare providers, there is potential to significantly reduce the global impact of preeclampsia and improve health outcomes for both mothers and their children. This research topic aims to delve into the recent advancements in understanding preeclampsia with a focus on early detection and reducing complications for both the mother and fetus. The primary objectives include elucidating the molecular mechanisms underlying the condition, identifying relevant biomarkers, and discovering effective medications for management and prevention. By synthesizing current knowledge and proposing future research directions, this initiative seeks to enhance our understanding and management of preeclampsia. To gather further insights into the complexities of preeclampsia, we welcome articles addressing but not limited to the following themes: Molecular mechanisms involved in the development of preeclampsia; Diagnostic and predictive methods for early detection of preeclampsia; Identification of biomarkers for early detection in pregnant women and those planning pregnancy; Gene signature studies including metabolomics and proteomics on patient samples; The impact of diseases such as HIV, diabetes, cancer, and recent outbreaks like COVID-19 on preeclampsia; Research utilizing animal models, cell lines, and methodologies specific to preeclampsia; Identifying gaps in current knowledge and proposing future research and clinical practice avenues.
