Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 10-week, 100-hr, nonclinical, laboratory-based, predoctoral internship on the self-reported confidence and self-efficacy of predoctoral interns in the field of counseling. The study was conducted with 100 predoctoral interns who completed a self-report questionnaire at the beginning and end of the internship. The results of the study indicated that the interns' self-reported confidence and self-efficacy increased significantly over the 10-week period. The findings of this study have implications for the field of counseling and for the preparation of future counselors.
